

Facts Concerning the Recent Carnival of Crime in Connecticut (annotated)

I was feeling blithe, almost jocund. I put a match to my cigar, and just then the mornings mail was handed in. The first superscription I glanced at was in a handwriting that sent a thrill of pleasure through and through me. It was Aunt Marys; and she was the person I loved and honored most in all the world, outside of my own household. She had been my boyhoods idol; maturity, which is fatal to so many enchantments, had not been able to dislodge her from her pedestal; no, it had only justified her right to be there, and placed her dethronement permanently among the impossibilities.
