

THE GROUND-HOUSE INDIANS AND STONE-CIST GRAVE BUILDERS OF KANSAS AND NEBRASKA

[Note: this pre-1923 publication has been converted from original format and may contain an occasional defect from the conversion process or original source.]
NORTHEASTERN KANSAS and southeastern Nebraska were inhabited by Ground-house Indians long before Coronado, Onate and the Siouxan tribes of Indians set foot on Quiviran soil. These Ground-house Indians were mound builders, buried their dead in different types of stone graves, and made three different types of pottery. It is not the purpose of the present paper to quote history, but to give a descriptive record of archaeological remains left by the people who inhabited Kansas before historic time and to record some Indian traditions which may help to identify the people who left those remains.
