

Apology of Socrates and Crito

Excerpt from Apology of Socrates and Crito This edition of the Apology of Socrates and the Crito is based upon Dr. Christian Crons eighth edition, Leipzig, 1882. The Notes and Introduction here given have in the main been confined within the limits intelligently drawn by Dr. Cron, whose commentaries upon various dialogues of Plato have done and still do so much in Germany to make the study of our author more profitable as well as pleasanter. No scruple has been felt, however, in making changes. I trust there are few if any of these which Dr. Cron might not himself make if he were preparing his work for an English-thinking and English-speaking public. No editor of Plato in England or America can escape the influence of Dr. Jowetts labors upon Plato; certainly not one who owes so much to Dr. Jowetts teaching and friendship as I do. This is a debt which, because it is contracted unconsciously for the most part, can hardly be adequately acknowledged. Riddells valuable edition has suggested many changes and additions in the Notes, and Stallbaum has been assiduously consulted. The Appendix to the Introduction differs very materially from the corresponding portion of Dr. Crons book. There as elsewhere I have been constantly advised and as constantly enlightened by my kind friend and former teacher, Professor W. W. Goodwin. But this list of my creditors must necessarily remain incomplete, for I cannot mention those who have helped me most, nor can I record here the names of all my pupils, past and present, whose needs have been my guide and my impulse in preparing this book.
