Not illustrated. 1921 Excerpt: ... roughly the truth is that Professor Gentile has recognised the unity without the universe, and Professor Alexander the universe without the unity. (a) In order to determine the real attitude of neo-idealist and of neo-realist to the unity of the universe, let us consider their respective modes of dealing with the problem of transcendence. If the reality of things is embodied in an actual succession of events, how is the connection between the members of this succession and one another, and also between each of them and the whole of finite experience, exhibited and maintained? How is a past event accessible from the standpoint of present experience? And, if the series by itself constitutes the whole and sole reality, and passes beyond present experience, how is any identity of characteristics guaranteed to the universe as a whole? In face of such questions as these, there is no doubt what the neo-idealist would answer. Of all things he most decidedly rejects the transcendent. Nothing pre-existent, nothing transcendent, is his watchword. Nothing enters into his real world which is not created, produced in vital coherence with all else, by the pure act of thinking. So far, one might say, the whole system is founded on the vital oneness of the thinking spirit, which is the whole and the universe., And the thinking spirit is explicitly declared not to mean the finite subject of thought. The theory is not a subjective idealism. To identify thought and reality would be absurd, if thought were the thinking of the empirical ego. The thought, whose thinking is reality, self-creating reality, is the thought which lives in the we, the group life, the social unity of fact and will. Metaphysic, the study of reality, is for them the Metafisica

Pacifism is opposition to war, militarism, or violence. The word pacifism was coined by the French peace campaigner Emile Arnaud (1864-1921) and adopted by other peace activists at the tenth Universal Peace Congress in Glasgow in 1901. A related term is ahimsa (to do no harm), which is a core principle of Indian philosophy. While modern connotations are recent, having been explicated since the late 19th century, the concept of non-violence has a long history. Bernard Bosanquet (philosopher) - Wikipedia This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text.
