Cassinus and Peter. A Tragical Elegy. 1731. Two college-sophs of Cambridge growth, Both special wits, and lovers both, Conferring as they used to meet
On love, and books, in rapture sweet, (Muse, find me names to fit my metre, Cassinus this, and tother Peter), Friend Peter to Cassinus goes, To chat awhile and warm his nose; But such a sight was never seen, The lad lay swallowd up in spleen; He seemd as just crept out of bed, One greasy stocking round his head, The other he sat down to darn With threads of different colourd yarn; His breeches torn, exposing wide A ragged shirt and tawny hide: Scorched were his shins, his legs were bare But well embrownd with dirt and hair: A rug was oer his shoulders thrown; A rug, for night-gown he had none; About the Publisher
