How to Use Essential Oils: A Beginners Guide on How To Use Essential Oils in the Home Once upon a time, human beings lived in perfect symbiosis with their environment believing that Mother Nature is the perfect provider for every possible need. Then came the era where everything was man-made. Synthetic chemicals penetrated every aspect of life and brought along a deluge of prosperity. Everything was going good for a while and then the side-effects kicked in. Side effects of the chemicals used in food, cosmetics, cleaning products and medicine slowly eroded the benefits offered by creating other problems, which were complex and often life threatening. Quick to take measures to correct the wrong, today the world is rediscovering the power of all natural products in every aspect of their life. Phasing out chemicals, we are living through an era where terms like organic, all-natural, herbal, essential oils and-the-like are growing in popularity.

Did You Know...
Essential oils have been used since ancient times. There is mention about essential oils in the Holy Bible, and in the tombs of the Pharaohs of Egypt. It is also known that Egyptians used many essential oils in beauty products and for embalming. A quick test of purity is simple enough for anyone to do. Take one drop of the essential oil and drop it on construction paper. It should evaporate without leaving any trace on the paper. Exception to this rule are patchouli, myrrh and absolutes. Essential oils are not actually oils. These are highly concentrated forms of the plant part. For example, just one drop of peppermint essential oil equals to 30 cups of peppermint tea. It takes 5,000 pounds of rose petals to extract just one pound of rose essential oil. Plus so much more!
